Nursing skills learned locally help patients halfway around the world

Sara Planton, a registered nurse who works in the cath lab at St. Luke's Medical Center faces the daily challenges of providing high quality patient care in a fast-paced, high-stress, technology-driven environment. She is the cardiologist's "right hand" during delicate life-saving therapies.

Last February, Sara joined Gerald Dorros, MD, a St. Luke's cardiologist, for a week of working and teaching in India. Dr. Dorros, an expert in cutting-edge interventional procedures, had been invited to work and teach at Vijaya Heart Foundation and Southern Railway Hospital in Madras and Christian Medical Center in Velore. These are cities in southeastern India, a subcontinent with nearly a billion people.

"When I boarded the plane in Chicago, I was excited, anxious and very uncertain about what was going to happen. What would the nurses and doctors be like? How could I speak to the patients, and in what language? After working at St. Luke's ultra-modern facility, what would the hospital facilities be like? Would the nurses and technicians listen to me during the procedures?" Sara had wondered.

"I never dreamed that my work could be so exciting, so exhilarating. The hospital facilities were sophisticated, something I had not anticipated. However I knew that I needed the right attitude, a non-judgemental view; this was imperative. I also began to realize that no environment is just like home," explains Sara.

The St. Luke's cath lab works at a fast rate, and Sara quickly learned that the tempo in India is slower; while Sara adjusted her pace, she did not alter her expectations of patient care.

"I had faith in Sara's ability to adapt to a variety of situations, to remain calm and focused during a crisis, and to teach and explain in a

In India, Sara was the only one in the cath lab who knew what to expect as Dr. Dorros worked. The Indian staff was eager to learn from both of them. "However, I often had to remind Dr. Dorros that he needed to explain both the 'what' and 'why' of each detailed step as he performed it. He often focused so totally on his work that he didn't speak or communicate with the people in the lab, something that we have become familiar with at St. Luke's. Here staff may not have time to ask questions later."

"We'd also brought specialized equipment which was new and had never been seen by them. We had to demonstrate and explain," adds Sara. The Indian nurses and technicians, skilled in coronary balloon angioplasty, were easily able to adapt their knowledge to the new equipment.

Sara looks back on February's trip in satisfaction at the job well done and forward in anticipation of another trip to India later this month. "I'm just as excited and nervous, but more aware of what will be going on and what I can anticipate," she says.
Local and long-distance calls among Aurora affiliates cost thousands of dollars every month, money that could be put to better use,” says Debbie Janke, IS technical project coordinator. “Within the Metro Region, we’re fortunate to be able to make telephone calls through a number of cost-saving tie-lines.”

For example, to call from Sinai Samaritan Medical Center to Hartford Memorial Hospital, dial 88-83 and the four-digit extension. Or if you don’t know the extension at HMH, dial 88-83, and “0” for the operator.

“That call is a free internal call, saving the cost of long-distance,” explains Debbie. Even local outside calls, at 9 cents each, add up, so Debbie recommends using the tie-line connection whenever possible.

To be cost-effective, use the following tie-line access codes, plus the four-digit extension:

- 83 — Hartford Memorial Hospital
- 83 — Aurora Health Center, Slinger
- 84 — Aurora Health Center, Racine
- 84 — Aurora Health Center, Kenosha (South Region)
- 86 — St. Luke’s Medical Center
- 88 — Sinai Samaritan Medical Center

When using the access codes, think of the Heil Building as the hub. For example, from SLMC to SSMC, it’s 88-88; from SSMC to SLMC, it’s 88-86; from Slinger to Racine, it’s 83-83-84. Debbie explains that the sequence of numbers varies, depending on where you’re calling from. “It takes a little effort to learn, but the savings add up.”

If you have questions, call Debbie, at (414) 647-6401. Better yet, use the tie line access code and 6401.

Interoffice mail is another money-saving option for Metro Region employees. Be sure to use interoffice mail whenever possible. At 32 cents for a one-ounce letter, or a dollar or two for a large envelope, mailing costs add up and impact the bottom line. Check with your on-site mailroom for information on which sites are served by interoffice mail.

Do you think that ill health is an unpredictable occurrence or that much of ill health will be predictable, capable of being prevented or managed. In the old paradigm, or model, ill health was thought to be unpredictable; the new model challenges that belief.

Underlying Aurora’s care management philosophy is the belief that ill health can often be prevented or can always be managed for better outcomes.
Insomnia—the inability to fall asleep or stay asleep—is an extremely common symptom of underlying problems, such as stress. But don’t despair. Following these tips may help you to enjoy a good night’s sleep:

- Avoid taking naps. They can interfere with your nighttime sleep.
- Exercise may deepen your sleep, but don’t exercise just before going to bed.
- Avoid all caffeine within six hours of going to bed.
- Set a regular wake-up time for yourself.
- Avoid smoking at bedtime. Nicotine is a stimulant that disturbs sleep.
- Avoid alcohol. Alcohol may help you fall asleep, but it may interrupt your sleep and cause you to feel tired the next day.
- Use a fan or some steady hum if your sleep environment is noisy.
- If you are not asleep in 10 to 15 minutes, go into another room, until you feel tired, then return to your bedroom to try again.

Sinai Samaritan, West Allis recognize employees for service

Sinai Samaritan Medical Center recognizes Jesse Gomez, plant operations, recipient of the August Golden Moment Award. Jesse was nominated because of a recent situation in which inpatient rehabilitation needed locks changed to help protect a brain-injured patient. Jesse was on the unit within 15 minutes, promptly changed the locks, then checked with the rehab staff to make sure everything was satisfactory before leaving the unit. Jesse was also praised for consistently providing a very high level of service that was shown by his timely response, pride of workmanship and friendly, respectful approach to coworkers and the public. Congratulations Jesse!

West Allis Memorial Hospital recognizes Donna Choinski, case manager, Robert Churchill, loss prevention officer, Kate Deakin, patient relations representative, Rita Falzarano, LPN-day surgery, Wendy Hass, CNA-surgery, Betty Kleiner, RN-surgery, and Mary Mouradian, van driver, recipients of the August GEM Awards. Robert's nomination by a patient shows the kind of service the GEM Award recognizes: Robert led a patient, who was from Hartford, to the freeway entrance and pointed the way for him.

West Allis Memorial Hospital and the Visiting Nurse Association of Wisconsin have merged their home-delivered meal programs and created, Meals a'la Wheels.

"The reason for the partnership is to allow us to serve more people in the future and to provide services 365 days a year. Together, we have more resources available, including full-time volunteer coordination," says Carol Johanson, director-dietary services, WAMH. Currently, about 450 people receive meals from Meals a'la Wheels.

The dedicated volunteers from both organizations are continuing in their current roles delivering meals.

Because there are more volunteers working together, Meals a'la Wheels will be able to offer meals seven days a week with a six-week menu cycle.

"Combining existing programs gives us the ability to provide more than just a meal," says Eric Tetzlaff, who had managed the program before being named to a new VNA position. "The volunteers will be able to observe client health, environment and overall well being so that we can make appropriate contacts, if needed," he adds. The VNA has been delivering meals for 32 years.

For further information about Meals a'la Wheels, and for information about volunteering, call (414) 328-4444.
